On The Lighter Side

It's always fun to read about the famous Yankees catcher Yogi Berra, who may be remembered more for his tendency toward malapropism and fracturing the English language in highly provocative, interesting ways than for his great exploits on the baseball diamond.

"It ain't over 'til it's over" is arguably the most famous, most often quoted example of his wisdom, along with his general comment on baseball:

"90 percent of the game is half mental." Simultaneously denying and confirming his reputation, Berra once stated, "I really didn't say everything I said."

Former head football coach at FSU

(in the 60s), Bill Peterson was a pioneer of the passing game, a man ahead of his time in that aspect of the game. He is also known for his convoluted sayings that may have left his players scratching their heads:

- "You guys line up alphabetically by height."
- "Men, I want you just thinking of one word all season. One word and one word only: Super Bowl."
- "You guys have to run a little more than full speed out there."

- "Lead us in a few words of silent prayer."
- "I want you guys to pair up in groups of three and then line up in a circle."
- "I'm the football coach around here and don't you remember it."
- "I used to have this slight speech implement and couldn't remember

- things before I took the Sam Carnegie course."
- "Just remember the words of Patrick Henry: 'Kill me or let me live.'"
- "The greatest thing just happened to me. I just got inducted into the Florida Sports Hall of Fame. They had a standing observation for me."

- "Stand on your helmet and put the sidelines under your left arm."
- "I'm not surprised that Dallas is starting five non-regulars against us. I know I'd do it if I were in Tom Landry's position. In fact, I'd like to be playing Houston myself."
